Save farmland, the King County program
Richard W. Dunford describes efforts to retain agricultural land and open space in Washington’s most urban county.

Commentary: Farm and conservation policy decisions Reagan will face
Lauren Soth looks at the future of conservation programs under the new Reagan administration.

Commentary: Problems and prospects for the Agricultural Conservation Program
Kenneth A. Cook analyzes the first major evaluation of ACP since the program’s start in 1936.

Soil conservation “down under”
Arthur Latornell reports on problems and programs in Australia.

Environmental education for the eighties
John F. Disinger discusses progress in environmental education during the seventies and prospects for the eighties.

Protecting the soil resource base
W. E. Larson looks at soil degradation in the United States and its effects on food and fiber production.

Developing quail habitat on farmland
William G. Minser Ill and James L. Byford provide guidelines for those landowners in the Southeast who want to develop habitat for quail and other farm game species.

Pen points

In the news

Upcoming

Books, etc.

Cover
Wheat, a universal symbol for food and fiber, brings to mind the task of protecting the soil resource base, thereby assuring an agricultural productivity sufficient to feed people in the decades ahead. See page 13. Photo by Jim Romo, Missoula, Montana.