

CONTENTS

Features

311

Viewpoint: The inviolate ocean

Charles Osterberg critiques current policy on hazardous waste disposal

312

Soil conservation policy: Local action and federal alternatives

Richard Barrows and Carol Olson examine the experience and implications of a conservation district's regulatory approach to soil conservation

317

Private property and soil loss regulations

James L. Arts reviews the legal basis for regulatory soil conservation programs

320

New roots for American agriculture

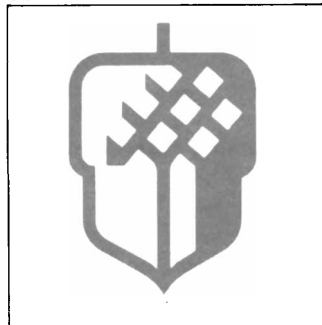

Wes Jackson and Marty Bender propose an approach to soil conservation that would change the face of American agriculture

325

The Iowa Natural Heritage Foundation: "For those who follow"

An interview with the chairman of a new organization that involves the private sector in land conservation

328

Environmental education: The Pontotoc experience

F. Dwain Phillips outlines the vital features of a conservation education success story in Oklahoma

330

Commentary: RCA and the art of the possible

Kenneth A. Cook analyzes the key elements of the federal government's proposed soil conservation program

Departments

310

Pen points

334

In the news

338

Upcoming

339

Books, etc.

361

Index

Research reports

341

Measuring crop residue cover

J. M. Laflen, M. Amemiya, and E. A. Hintz

344

The Michigan Farmland Preservation Program: An evaluation

Philip D. Gardner and Donald N. Frazier

347

Surface mining and reclamation: Initial changes in soil character

Sam J. Indorante, Ivan J. Jansen, and Charles W. Boast

351

Calculating indices of land suitability for agricultural crops: An interactive numerical technique

S. O. Lok and M. Phipps

355

Conversion of the universal soil loss equation to SI metric units

G. R. Foster, D. K. McCool, K. G. Renard, and W. C. Moldenhauer

360

Volume estimates of coarse fragments in soils: A combination of visual and weighing procedures

E. B. Alexander

Cover

Sunset over an Iowa marsh, the kind of scene that a private conservation program in that state would like to preserve for future generations. See page 325. Photo by Carl Kurtz.