Journal of Soil & Water Conservation

To advance the science and art of good land and water use worldwide

CONTENTS

Features

388

Viewpoint: On living with the land

Frederick Steiner says that to live with the land will require construction of a new aesthetic order

390

Living with the land

Wendell Berry contemplates humankind's relation to the land, a relation ruled not by anyone's preference but by nature and by human nature

394

The global competition for land

Lester Brown, in analyzing worldwide pressures on the land, believes soil and water conservation and climate and population stabilization are key factors to a sustainable future

398

The politics of the environment

R. Neil Sampson argues that people want to be a positive part of solving environmental problems and that we must find ways in which they can participate

401

The politics of choice

Ralph Grossi contends that the farm community must take the lead in helping to develop environmental policies that affect agriculture

404

Aldo Leopold: Reflections of a daughter

Nina Leopold Bradley looks back at lessons learned about living with the land at the Shack on Leopold's now-famous sand farm

406

Managing the land: A technology perspective

Robert R. Shaw outlines why conservation programs offered by federal agencies must involve the best available technology based on good science

409

Restoring the land

William Richards says that implementation of conservation compliance is among the most important and immediate steps that can be taken to restore the land

411

Innovations in coordinated resource management planning

E. William Anderson provides an update on how coalitions of land users and agencies are using the CRMP process to overcome polarization about land management issues

415

Wetlands in watersheds

Michael D. Wells explains how Missouri conservationists are enhancing wetland values with small watershed floodwater-retarding structures

Commentary

417

Land use ethics and property rights

Richard C. Collins confronts the question of what really is ethical in dealing with land, landowners' rights, and the public's concern about preservation of agricultural land

418

Wetlands: Sell to the highest bidder?

Stephen B. Lovejoy proposes a wetland auction to sell the rights to protect or use wetlands to the highest bidder

Research reports

441

Methods for estimating wetland loss: The Rainbasin region of Nebraska, 1927-1981

Mark S. Kuzila, Donald C. Rundquist, and Jeffrey A. Green
